

KAISER DENIES MAKING HUGE PROFITS IN WAR

Tells Investigators Gains Were Offset by His Losses

DENIES FAVORITISM

Figures Show Tremendous Profits for His Family

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25—Henry J. Kaiser, testifying before the House Merchant Marine Committee, which is investigating wartime shipbuilding profits, acknowledged yesterday that excluding the setbacks in allied fields and also apart from his interest in other enterprises, the shipbuilding profits of the four companies brought his family $16,362,000 after taxes, or about eight times its capital investment in them.

Kaiser denied that he was "favored" by the Government during the war and asserted that in the shipyard operations of four Kaiser-affiliated companies he suffered a net loss of $13,900,000 because of side ventures in steel and magnesium.

The industrialist testified for the second day before the subcommittee, which is investigating wartime shipbuilding profits.

Confining his figures to the Kaiser Company, Inc., the Oregon Shipbuilding Corporation; Kaiser Cargo, Inc., and Permanent Metals Corporation, Mr. Kaiser at the end of a day of questions, gave, with the aid of his attorney and accountant, the following summary:

The Kaiser family, apart from other stockholders, made $41,000,000 from Kaiser Company, Inc., and $5,000,000 through the three other companies, but lost $59,000,000 in its steel operations, for a net plunge into red ink of $13,000,000.

The earnings stated were before taxes, but it was said that phase of the matter was academic because of the overriding loss.

The figures, however, did not take into account that Mr. Kaiser emerged from the war's operations as the owner of a $26,000,000 magnesium plant and as having paid about half the cost of a $100,000,000 steel plant, for which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation advanced the money.

As to the magnesium plant, he asserted that it was losing money at the rate of $50,000 a month, but Only Poland supported Russia, while France and Egypt abstained. Polish insinuations that pressure had been brought on smaller nations were pointedly denied by the United States. ## ONE MAN'S OPINION . . .

By Walter Kiernan
(Distributed by International News Service)

The price of mattresses has gone up and now even the guy who says "I should have stood in bed" is shelling out.

Anyhow cars are coming through in greater number . . . I know a fellow who will have the best-looking automobile in town when the bumpers, hub caps, back seat cushion and horn button arrive.

He says he doesn't care if the back seat never arrives . . . He's a married man.

I was in an agency where they were checking over a new car . . . One fellow says "Body" . . . the other fellow says "Check" . . . "Wheels" . . . the other fellow says "Check" . . . "Motor" . . . the other fellow says "That does it—you went too far."

Four of those stripped-down cars passed through my town the other day headed for a dealer's . . . A cop flagged them down and asked "Have you reported this accident?"

But it happens to everybody . . . I hear Henry Ford has taken the crystal set out of his Model T until a radio comes through for his new personal car.

Anybody want to buy a small oil stove that folds under the instrument board?

EXPRESS VS. PARCEL POST

When transportation gets tied up in any locality as a result of strikes, an embargo usually is laid on express shipments. That happened the other day in New York City, as a result of a truck strike and a harbor strike.

Nearly all the express business of the United States now is conducted by the railroads through the Railway Express Agency. When the government temporarily took over the privately-owned express companies along with the railroads during World War I, it combined the separate companies into one agency, and the eggs were never unscrambled.

Before the parcel post was established in 1913, only small and light packages could be sent through the mails. Most parcels had to go by express. This was hard on families living some distance from railroad or steamship lines, and the parcel post was set up chiefly because of pressure from farmers and the mail order houses.

Socialists point to the success of parcel post as proving that government operation is not necessarily less efficient than private enterprise, and that unification with all its top-heaviness may be more serviceable than competition with all its duplication.

The free enterprise camp retorts that whenever shippers want to be sure of good service they patronize the express companies instead of the parcel post. At all events, government workers are less likely to strike than workers for private employers, and it would be ironic if Socialism, demanded by union groups, were to be adopted in some countries to head off excesses of labor.

A SECRET REVEALED

One of the several puzzling situations growing out of World War II, was Japan's decision not to wage war against Russia when the Reds had their backs to the wall at Stalingrad. Most Americans expected the Japs to strike a weakened Russia in Siberia.

There were hints in news leaks from Germany that Hitler and his aides clamored and demanded that Japan get in. But Japan did not and the reason why has been revealed by DeWitt C. Poole, former American diplomat who headed a mission to Germany after the surrender to interrogate a half hundred top Nazis on war secrets.

Poole says that Berlin and Tokyo made a secret treaty in 1936 in which both agreed that they would not conclude any secret pact with Russia without both sitting in on the transaction. Three years later Hitler violated this secret treaty by making a political pact with Stalin which he later broke by invading Russia.

Tokyo shied at any deal with Berlin and so kept out of the war in Europe. The Japs are past masters at violating treaties but apparently resent it when a fellow conspirator does.

Washington continues to insist there is plenty of everything. But there are a few skeptics who continue to ask, "Where?"

Picture Book BIRTHDAY

By TRACY ADRIAN

One hundred years ago this 1946, Kate Greenaway was born in England, and her charming sketches of children are still beloved. Her picture book children have had great influence on little girl fashions all this time, even to this centennial year, when Helen Lee dreamed up new frocks inspired by the original drawings.

The frocks pictured here today are of the new collection; you probably all know how the originals looked, with their capelets and berthas, their full skirts and ruffles; their basques and bustles and sashes, etc.

Today's Kate Greenaway dresses have our shorter skirts, our thinner and colorfast fabrics, our simpler taste in such matters as capelets and ruffles. But they are as much like Kate's clothes as would be today's descendants of the little girls of a century ago.

Nardy for Play or school, pretty for parties in general... a cotton red-and-white windowpane plaid, with shoulder cape, red-braided hem.

Blossoms in Various lilac tints splash over this pique Kate Greenaway cousin, which is made with typical ruffles, worn with typical slippers and gloves.

This Chambray Frock is pale gray, with bright double-ruffles of yellow around the deep bertha collar, edging the full skirt which becomes an overskirt

READY-MADES WILL FIT MUCH BETTER AFTER ALTERATION

By Edith M. Hopkins
(Home Economics Representative)

Although many ready-made dresses do not fit properly, women are satisfied with them because they may be worn. Alterations may be done at the store where the dress is bought, with an extra charge, but homemakers who sew may do their own altering.

Some of the points which need to be checked for correct fit are the location of the waistline, placement of the shoulder seam and armhole, fit of the neckline, ease at hipline, and evenness of hemline.

The waistline seam should be located at the waistline and should be covered by the belt all the way around. The seam can be ripped and the skirt raised or lowered as needed.

The location of the armhole is important for both appearance and comfort. This seam usually comes at the end of the shoulder and drops in a straight line both front and back. Fashion changes may require an extended or even a dropped shoulder line but it still should fit the wearer trimly. The addition of larger shoulder pads may correct some of the poor fitting of sagging shoulders. If the sleeve and shoulder line still droop, the sleeve should be removed and set up on the correct line for the individual, using the proper shoulder pad.

A neckline which is too large may be fitted by taking small "arts" at the back of the neck. If it is much too large, the whole front of the dress may have to be lifted at the shoulder.

Dresses which are too big through the hipline do not look well. The excess fullness can be taken out at the side seams or other gore seams. A good job of refitting cannot be done without changing the placket.

A straight, even hemline is something which anyone can have but it is often overlooked. The hem should be straightened after all other fitting is completed.

WELLSBORO — (INS) — For the first time in the history of the Leonard Harrison State Park, tourists from every State in the nation visited the preserve during the summer of 1946.

Carrots Rich in "Blackout Vitamins"

During the Battle of Britain, when the RAF was achieving such remarkable success in shooting down night bombers, the "secret" leaked out that the British were feeding their night fighter pilots and gunners bushels of carrots. The high carotene content of the vegetable was said to work miracles in improving night vision. That was how vitamin A came to be called the "blackout vitamin."

The real secret of the success of the night fighters, it was divulged later, was radar rather than carrots. But the story focused attention on this vegetable's high carotene content and its importance in relieving night blindness due to vitamin A deficiency.

Carrots are heavily loaded with carotene, which the body turns into vitamin A. When the supply of vitamin A is insufficient, the eyes cannot adjust quickly from bright light to darkness. This eye trouble, called night blindness, may cause the sufferer to run into objects at night which would be seen by a person with normal vision.

Vitamin A, like other vitamins, helps to protect the body against infections. It is needed for growth and for healthy teeth, bones and nerves. This vitamin is important for good skin and good linings to nose, mouth, and organs throughout the body.

Any Home Grown Tomatoes In Your Garden?

Can Any Available? Blight Has Damaged Both Amateur and Commercial Crops

If you've got home grown tomatoes and you can't eat them, this advice comes from Production and Marketing Administration, USDA. Next winter you will be glad to have them to add to soups, or as flavoring for gravies. And you will put yourself on the back for your foresight, if you open each of your canning jars since blight has affected so much of the crop in the Northeast area that commercial supplies are apt to be less than usual.

Truck Crop News, published by Bureau of Agricultural Economics, USDA, reports that on September 1st, Jersey yields in some late areas were being cut by blight. The same report says blight is present in nearly all Pennsylvania tomato-growing sections with the eastern canning crop area hit badly—some growers having lost their entire crops. Some New York counties have reported less than a third of a crop left.

So can all you can and if tomatoes are missing make up for them by putting up some of the year's plentiful fruits.

Kaiser Denies Making Huge Profits in War

added that with good fortune in finding some "wholly new product," now in research, this might end as a great property.

Thus, he said, the post-war position created by his wartime activities, and aside from his new ventures, was "unpredictable."

As to the steel plant, he argued that he had been put in a "hopeless" competitive situation, unless the RFC lowered its demands on him, by what he asserted was an unfair advantage granted to the United States Steel Corporation.

That firm, Mr. Kaiser insisted, was "allowed" to buy at "20 cents on the dollar" a $200,000,000 plant, built by it during the war at Geneva, Utah, for the Defense Plants Corporation, while for his part he was being required to pay off his mill dollar for dollar.

Representative Fred Bradley, Republican, of Michigan, suggested that Mr. Kaiser "had the same opportunity as United States Steel" to bid on the DPC plant, but the witness replied that it would have been impossible for him to compete.

A statement on Mr. Kaiser's political support of President's Roosevelt was put into the record through a letter from Representative Roy O. Woodruff, Republican, of Michigan, who demanded an "exhaustive" examination of the war earnings of "New Deal sacred cows."

During the day, Mr. Kaiser was closeted with Republican committeemen, and at one point he was accused by Representative Alvin F. Welch, of Ohio, of having "hidden behind subterfuges" in the formation of shipbuilding companies, two of which had identical backers.

The industrialist shouted in response:

"I don't believe this is persecution, because I don't believe you are capable of it. You have made an attack on my character. All right, if it's on trial, let's try it."

"Oh, forget it," Mr. Welch replied, "and answer the question." There was a stir among Mr. Kaiser's associates, three of whom sat with him as he testified, and Representative Samuel K. McConnell, Jr., Republican of Pennsylvania, asserted:

"We are getting long guffaws from this group. He protested to Chairman Schuyler Otis Bland, of Virginia, saying: "We are getting a lot of stuff here that is not necessary."

"That is entirely so," Mr. Bland said. At another point, Mr. Kaiser said to Mr. Welch:

"Why don't you tell a truth?" The witness was accused in turn by Mr. Bradley of having suffered

"very convenient losses" of memory.

Except for a brief questioning at the start of the hearing by Marvin Coles, committee counsel, the Republican committeemen spent all day in examining Mr. Kaiser on the complex of corporation relationships, disputed fees and earnings, and as to how he had come out in his government contracting.

Mr. Kaiser dismissed as "too ridiculous" to pursue data before the committee from the Maritime Commission, estimating at about $190,000,000 the fees received by shipbuilding concerns in which he was interested, though their total capital investments were put by the Commission at some $2,500,000.

He said, however, that the fees to these companies for operating Government-built yards perhaps aggregated some $173,000,000, but this, he added, was "before taxes, before deduction of non-reimbursable charges, before renegotiation of profits."

He likewise challenged the Commission's figures as to the capital investments of Kaiser companies and affiliates.

Moreover, he argued that the committee's attorneys were over-emphasizing the factor of the original investment of an operator, contending that the purpose of the Government during the war was precisely to encourage production by corporations with little money in hand, but with "the organization and ability" to speed up shipbuilding.

Even in the present Government plan for renegotiating excess profits, he asserted, capital investment was but one of seven criteria used.

Little Comfort Seen As Sec'y Anderson's Report is Perused

currently meeting in Washington, but a technicality prevents a petition for decontrol to Secretary Anderson until October 8th.

Committee Chairman Roscoe Haynie, vice-president of Wilson Packers Company, Chicago, said that the present meeting is concerned principally with "figuring out how we can best get along under the present controls."

The Anderson speech and the advisory committee meeting all are part of a growing storm over meat price controls. Industry members have become increasingly vehement in declaring there cannot be an adequate meat supply as long as controls remain.

OPA and other agencies have noted an increasing number of letters and telegrams from the general public demanding price controls be removed so meat production can expand.

Anderson replied to critics of the present shortage by saying that while present controls do not guarantee a good immediate supply of meat, they are in the interest of full production. He said they were set to discourage the "unrestrained marketing of immature and unfinished animals."

He explained: "Sometimes we get more by waiting than by hasty marketing."

Other developments on the price front:

1. Restaurant men are still sizzling over the OPA-ordered rollback of meat dishes to prices of April 4-16, 1943. Complaining telegrams are pouring into Washington at the rate of 500 a day. The OPA Restaurant Advisory Committee is planning to ask complete decontrol on Thursday. Meanwhile, widespread non-compliance of the meat rollback is being reported.

2. The coffee industry advisory committee has informed OPA that it will meet on October 4th to "discuss decontrol." This is considered tantamount to an announcement that it will formally petition for an end of controls on that date.

3. The OPA announced suspension of price controls on a number of imported items, including foreign automobiles, furniture, motorcycles, bicycles, cameras and photographic equipment, industrial machinery, chinaware, glassware and household utensils and appliances. OPA said the articles suspended are "of minor significance in the nation's economy."

4. OPA removed price controls from sales of "packaged fuel"—coal or coke screenings compressed with a binder and sealed in paper. OPA said "This product is not an important item in either living or business costs."

Frank Carter Addresses The Bristol Camera Club

Members of Bristol Camera Club made an interesting and instructive photographic trip through Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, on Sunday. Scenic views along the Wissahickon Creek were photographed. Other such trips to historic and scenic places are planned for the near future.

Monday evening's meeting included an interesting discussion by the vice-president, Frank Carter, formerly a technician with a well-known photographic supply firm. His talk covered information on many types of films, their color sensitivities, uses, and the use of colored filters.

The next session, Sept. 30 at eight p. m. will be a business meeting followed by a discussion on cameras and their various uses. Anyone desiring to attend any of the meetings, or having intentions of becoming members are invited.
